

Often the singular is much easier to use clearly than the plural. For example:

- "sequences induce graphs" - is this a one-to-one relationship? "each sequence induces a graph"
- "graphs might contain paths" suggests a one-to-many relationship but not conclusively. "a graph might contain one or more paths" makes this clear and also retains the possibility of zero paths.